Entitlement and the Affectional Bond: Justice in Close Relationships (Critical Issues in Social Justice)

If the truth were told, this volume and its direct antecedents must rank among the most ambitious, if not simply pretentious, endeavors imaginable, at least in the social sciences. The titles of the volume and the chapters, promising to integrate the experiences of the sense of justice and the affectional bonding of people in close relations, seem straightforward and reasonable enough. What they fail to convey, however, is the simple bald fact that we in the human social sciences have no firm grasp on either of these two fundamental experiences-what we sometimes call "love" and "justice." To begin with, even as "scientists" committed to understanding based upon systematic propositions linking publicly observable concepts, we have no clear consensus concerning the nature of the affectional bonds linking people in close relationships-love, intimacy, caring, mutual responsiveness, or the sense of justice, fairness, deserving, and in our efforts to understand entitlement. And we are continually handicapped in understanding these complex, moving experiences by the persistent tendency to reduce them to manifestations of, "nothing but," familiar psychological or even biological processes-"secondary rewards," "selfish genes." So, why then this volume? Although there are many answers to the question, probably the most germane is that the basic issues are so important and intriguing that the recent past has seen rather dramatic parallel growth in social scientists' interest in these two areas-justice and close relationships.
